火锅 Hot Pot

The five main races of China are the Han of China proper, the Mongolians, the Tibetans, the Manchurians and the Muslim tribes. Outside the great wall lived the nomadic Mongols, descendants of the great Kublai Khan, superb horsemen who in ancient times controlled an empire stretching from Peking to Vienna. Here were the origins of the Mongolian stove of China, where at night the nomadic tribes gathered around the cooking fire and prepared their simple meal. Chunks of meat were speared and cooked in a stew, bubbling in a primitive cauldron.

The gourmets of Beijing transformed the simple Mongolian pot into the festive dish we know today. Even so, it still appeals to our primitive love of fire, food and friendship.
